'An invaluable collection of source material.'
Professor Moshe Machover.

For the Palestinians of the West Bank and Gaza, the Six Day War 1967 was just the beginning of a long military occupation that has dominated their lives ever since. In June 1967, the people of Abu Dis, Palestine, found themselves in the front line of the war, and this book contains people's memories of their responses as the war started and in its immediate aftermath. These memories are contrasted to memories of the same period by people from Camden, London, including an Israeli woman who was called into the Israeli Reserve Army in 1967. There are also explanations from Abu Dis of the context of 1967 and the effects of the war on the lives of ordinary people in Abu Dis.
